Kathmandu

The Kathmandu Valley’s seven UNESCO monument zones reflect a range of architectural and artistic traditions. Beyond the best-known landmarks, smaller temples and shrines offer a closer look at the culture and daily life of Nepal.

Pashupatinath Temple

Dedicated to Lord Shiva, Pashupatinath stands on the banks of the Bagmati River. Its gilded roof and pagoda architecture are distinctive. Figures from Shiva’s family decorate the rafters, and statues of deities frame the silver-plated entrance doors. Entry to the main temple is restricted to Hindus. Visitors can see the exterior, the sadhus who gather nearby and the riverside ghats where Hindu cremations take place.

Swayambhunath

A flight of 365 steps leads to this hilltop complex overlooking Kathmandu. The monkeys that live around the shrines give it the name “Monkey Temple.” The stupa has a white base, the painted eyes of the Buddha and a gilded spire. The complex also contains temples, shrines, a monastery, a museum and a library. Alongside Boudhanath, Swayambhunath holds an important place in the valley’s Buddhist traditions.

Manakamana Temple (???????)

A 15-minute cable car ride leads up to Manakamana Temple in Gorkha District. The shrine stands on a ridge 4,272 feet above sea level, about 12 km south of Gorkha town. It is dedicated to Bhagwati, an incarnation of Parvati, and has been venerated since the 17th century. Its name joins mana, meaning heart, and kamana, meaning wish. Devotees believe that the goddess grants the wishes of those who make the pilgrimage.

Pokhara and Phewa Lake

Pokhara Valley encompasses the city, parts of Sarangkot and Kaskikot, and Phewa Lake. Nepal's second-largest lake reflects Mount Machhapuchhre, also known as Fishtail. The two-storey Barahi Bhagwati Temple stands on an island in the lake. Pokhara is known for boating and trekking, as well as rafting, canyoning, bungee jumping, paragliding and ultralight flights.
